

PEOPLE IN PRECAST

LONGSTANDING HUMES AUSTRALIA EMPLOYEE NEVILLE SCHOBER HAS REACHED A MILESTONE OF 40 YEARS WITH THE PRECAST CONCRETE COMPANY.

Neville Schober has worked for Humes in South Australia for 40 years.

Celebrations are in order for a local South Australian working in the precast concrete manufacturing industry.

Neville Schober the Production Manager at Humes in Pooraka, South Australia has now spent 40 years dedicated to the company.

With its head office in Brisbane and factories around the country, National Precast member Humes manufactures precast concrete elements for multiple solutions including bridges and platforms, road and rail infrastructure, tunnels, shafts and retaining structures.

The company prides itself on its ability to reliably produce high quality products and services to their clients.

Paul Adams, Humes' National Sales and

Marketing Manager says, it's the company's loyal and dedicated staff that underpin its track record and on-going results.

"Our staff have a reputation of being highly capable and passionate individuals, working with clients to excel their expectations and ultimately setting a high standard for attitude and work ethic," Mr. Adams says.

He says that Neville Schober's hard work and determination has been invaluable to Humes.

"He's got a wealth of knowledge, serious determination and a great attitude,"

Mr. Adams says.

Mr. Schober's long career in precast manufacturing began with Humes. Starting in a country factory, Mr. Schober was employed in a customer administration and dispatch role in the Riverland District, which is where his passion began for working with people as diverse as the products he produces.

When it comes to day-to-day life at Humes, Mr. Schober says he loves the daily interaction with the employees and customers from wide-ranging backgrounds.

"From engineers and builders, to local government teams, our product range allows me to provide solutions to a wide and varied group of customers. I'm involved in all aspects of the site's operation," he says.

"From planning site production to delivering world-class customer service, I also provide input to our operations and sales processes.

That keeps me busy and ensures the site runs smoothly," Mr. Schober says.

As no two days are the same in the construction industry, Mr. Schober sees each day as an opportunity to improve and deliver on the expectations of those he works with.

Today, Mr. Schober is seen as a role model in his workplace. His success has been instilled in those he works with each day, building lifelong relationships both within his fellow workers and with the broader industry.

Looking back on his journey with Humes and in the precast industry, Mr. Schober says he has been very fortunate in his career.

"I've spent 40 years doing what I love. I always strive to be honest and truthful in how I approach everything. I think if you value these traits on the inside, people eventually can see that," he says.

National Precast congratulates Mr. Schober on his successful career at Humes.

CEO Sarah Bachmann says people like Neville are like diamonds in the industry, critical to the success of the organisation's members.

"It's people like Neville who often underpin the consistency that our members aim to deliver. All of us at National Precast wish him many more years of productivity and passion." ■
